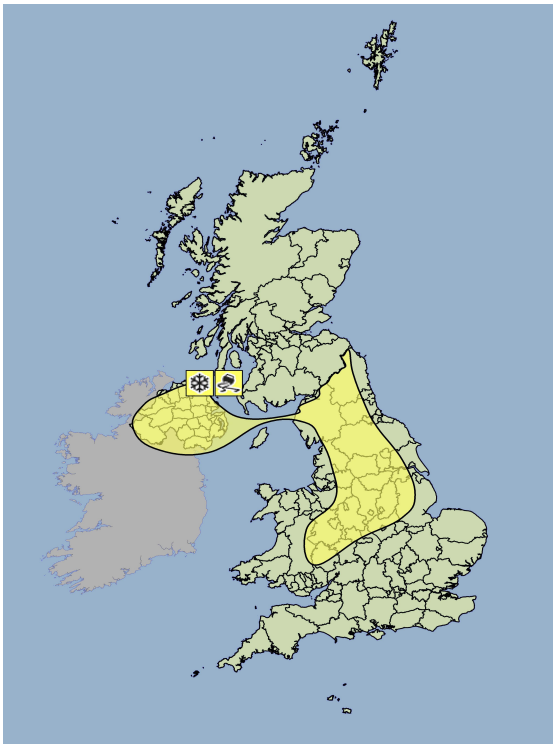
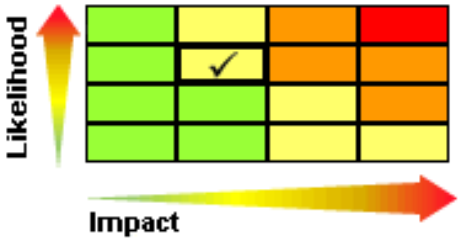
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Cold air will move southeast across the UK on Sunday following a frontal system. Within the cold air frequent showers will form and push into areas exposed to the strong west to northwesterly winds. These showers falling primarily as snow above around 200-300 m with a mixture of hail, sleet and snow to lower levels.

Accumulations of 2-5 cm of snow are possible around 250 m, with some temporary slushy accumulations below this, and accumulations of 5-10 cm above 400 m. Icy stretches are likely to form after showers.

To the east of the Pennines and the Welsh mountains, showers will be less frequent, but road surface temperatures lower, leading to an increased risk of ice following the occasional shower.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow and Ice

Valid from 14:00 on Sun, 07th Dec 2014 until 12:00 on Mon, 08th Dec 2014

Showers will affect the area during Sunday and into Monday morning, falling increasingly as snow, particularly above 200-300 m with a mixture of rain, hail, sleet and snow to lower levels. Accumulating snow may lead to travel disruption on routes over high ground, whilst icy stretches are also likely to form more generally on untreated surfaces.

The public should be aware of the potential for disruption to travel during Sunday night and Monday morning.
